"AT CRIPPLE CREEK" has no legs to stand on—it stands on its merits. You have read of the old mining camp days with their dens, their gambling houses, and their dance halls, but few have ever seen them. At the Ogden Theater this week you may see this chapter from Life's great book, and be better informed about the things you should know.

STORY OF PLAY

"AT CRIPPLE CREEK." The halcyon days of the old time west, to the present generation is something to be read and told by the few old timers who are still alive. The days of the mining camps, gambling halls and dance houses. Of such of these "At Cripple Creek" retells the stirring events and happenings that took place in the greatest gold camp the world has ever known. Way back in 1882 in Cripple Creek, Col., there was a miner by the name of Joe Mayfield, who was nicknamed the Parson, because he was the only miner in the camp who would not work on Sunday. He adopted a small child to raise who became known as Little Fatto, the Parson's claim. Martin Mason, who run the dance hall, "The Temple of David" lured young girls to his place by means of an advertisement for a governess. Maggie Mason's supposed child kills a pet bear and saves Tatto's life and just as Mason is about to beat her for it, Reginald Harwood of Boston, Mass., comes in, has a fight with the Mexican, Manuel Alverez, to protect Belle Gordon, whom Mason has lured from the East. Mayfield steps in and protects her from Mason and takes Belle and Ann Marbury one of the inmates of the hall to his home.

From then on events move with lightning rapidity, culminating with Joe finding out that "The Last Dollar" and Belle finding out that Maggie Mason is her sister Alice, whom Mason has found years before in the wreck of a wagon train that the Indians had robbed and burned.

One of the many thrilling scenes of the play takes place in the second act when the Mexican throws Little Fatto off the cliff and the Indian swings out and catches her in mid air.

"At Cripple Creek" should prove of more than ordinary interest, for the fact that it is the play in which Miss Mayme Arington and Thomas Pawley were starred throughout the large Eastern cities. The parts of Joe Mayfield and Maggie Mason are what might be called "pet parts" of these two clever leading people and will undoubtedly give another example of their cleverness and versatility.

"At Cripple Creek" will run the entire week commencing Sunday, Dec. 7th with the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

SCENIC EFFECTS—Messrs. Arington and Greenwell wish to announce that the scenic effects of "At Cripple Creek" are the result of an extra effort to make them the most gorgeous ever seen at any of their productions—and this is saying a great deal.
